

Infant Development and Supported Child Development Program Policy Revisions:

Frequently Asked Questions

Why were the programs' policies revised?

The update of IDP and SCDP policy was a commitment under the 2012/13 Operational and Strategic Directional Plan. The policy revisions are the result of significant collaboration between IDP and SCDP coordinators and consultants and the CYSN Policy team.

The SCDP policy was a priority for review as it was released as a “working draft” in 2005 for the then-new program. There was explicit intention to update the policy once the program had been operational for a few years. The IDP policy and procedures manual was last updated in March 2004 and included policies and procedures that are more properly the responsibility of the employing agency, such as hiring procedures, orientation for staff, etc.

What is different in the IDP policy?

The 2004 IDP policies and procedures manual included extensive procedures that are more appropriately the responsibility of the contracted agency. Exclusion of such procedures and a concise approach to standards reduced the manual from 288 pages to 22 pages.

With the following exceptions, there are no substantial additions to IDP policy which will affect practice:

- New minimum standards for developmental screening and assessment instruments are included in both SCDP and IDP policies.
- There is a greater requirement for collaborative and culturally safe working relationships with Aboriginal service providers.
- Minimum and preferred qualifications for employment are defined.

What is different in the SCD policy?

Best practices informed the revision of the SCDP policy and the development of standards, with an aim towards greater clarity and consistency. There is a greater focus on providing culturally appropriate services for Aboriginal children and families. Additionally, a number of “grey areas” have been clarified and there is greater emphasis on the full range of services provided by SCD programs, with extra staffing supports as only one component of the available services. Please see the table attached to this document.

What about policy for ASCD?

ASCD consultants participated extensively in the development of the SCD program policy in order to ensure that the importance of culturally safe and appropriate services is embedded in SCD policy. ASCD programs may use the SCD policy as a reference for their practice.

Why are there new standards for screening and assessment?

As you may be aware, the Ministry of Children and Family Development recently completed a literature and cross-jurisdictional review in order to ensure that IDP and SCD policies are evidence-based and supported by research. This review identified the need to establish consistent minimum standards for developmental assessment and screening tools in order to ensure accurate, reliable and effective assessments. Those standards have been developed with the support of an Advisory Table, which also recommended a number of tools for use in BC.

What instruments were recommended by the Advisory Table?

The following instruments are recommended for use in BC. Some of these tools are already in use by many programs here in BC.

- Developmental Screening:
  - Ages and Stages Questionnaire (ASQ)
  - Ages and Stages Questionnaire – Social-Emotional (ASQ-SE)

- Criterion-Referenced:
  - Assessment, Evaluation and Programming System (AEPS)

- Developmental Assessment:
  - Battelle Developmental Inventory (BDI)
  - Developmental Assessment of Young Children (DAYC)
  - Brigance Inventory of Early Development

The three recommended developmental assessment instruments will be tested for practicality and utility in IDP, AIDP, SCD, ASCD programs in the province.

Will my program have flexibility in terms of which tool I use?

As family-centred and child-focussed practitioners, a range of tools and approaches is needed to effectively meet families' needs. The standards set forth the minimum criteria for screening and assessment instruments. While the Advisory Table recommended the tools noted above, others may be used as long as they meet the standards. Additionally, programs may find that some developmental assessment tools are more practical than others and this may influence the availability of training and related resources.

How will we get trained in new assessment tools?

A working group has been formed to further explore the available instruments and consider how to best introduce them to practitioners throughout the province. Some programs in the Lower Mainland and Interior will be participating in this early implementation process. This will inform the planning for training and further implementation.

How do the new standards for assessment affect our practice?

The new standards for screening and assessment tools do not mean that all or most children should be formally tested. The new standards are not intended to change practice in relation to making a decision whether or not a child should be formally tested. Rather, the new standards ensure that practitioners are using evidence-based and research supported tools should they decide that a formal assessment is needed.

Are we allowed to continue using the Gesell?

The Gesell does not meet the minimum standards. We are working with the Regional Advisors and programs to develop a training framework that is sustainable and practical. In the meantime, please continue to use the screening and assessment tools for which you have been trained.

Will Gesell training continue to be available until we are ready to use a new tool?

Funds for training and professional development are managed at the Service Delivery Area (SDA) level. The Regional Advisors and MCFD staff work together to make decisions about training that is offered. This may include Gesell training if that is seen to be a priority within the overall local plan for training and professional development. However, please note that the Gesell will be phased out over time.

Will there be money for programs to be trained on any new instruments?

Funds for training and professional development will be maintained at their current level. Each SDA will continue to make decisions about priorities for utilizing this funding.
